

Post-Brexit trade deals already starting to bear fruit

‘Chicken feed’ was how some Remainers described the UK’s post-Brexit trade deals with countries around the rest of the world.

They may wish to reconsider those remarks in the light of the latest figures which have now been published in relation to the Anglo-Australian trade deal.

The increase in UK goods exports to Australia is nothing less than astonishing as the following tables indicate.

We don’t yet have figures for service exports yet, a traditional strength for the UK economy. We expect those to have grown substantially too.

Who said the future of the UK lay in Europe? A glance at the chart below demonstrates the extraordinary potential for global Britain in a post-Brexit world. We say more of this please!
